

Abby Allison

TOKEN OF TEACHING

Weekly Report 09/10/2017-09/17/2017

Through the completion of my second assessment, I gained knowledge pertaining to training management consultants. The knowledge from my research will aid in my future. This is because while meeting with a mentor, I will be prepared to know expectations and areas someone with no experience will lack in. Knowing how to train a management consultant will allow for easier learning while in the training stage. The chapter of the book which provided this information was quite vague and was a challenge to extract good information from. Although this was a challenge, there was still good information regarding training. For example, many management consultants entering the field must shadow an experienced consultant because there is specific reactions and thought processes firms train for. This is important to know because when talking with a mentor, it is necessary to pay close attention to their thought processes and how they go about solving problems.

The new information regarding how new management consultants are trained led to more questions to ask a mentor. A mentor would be able to share a more specific description of training and tips on entering the field. Next week, it is a good idea to focus more of my time and attention on my resume.