Weekly Report 03/18/2018-03/24/2018

Over the week, I focused primarily on my final product and catching up after missing four days of school from the flu. In regards to my final product, I researched the Magic Band and began contacting people from Disney about my plans.

I am very happy with my research about the Magic Band. I thought I would be wasting my time as I have used the technology before and have a grasp on the main functions of the tool. With the first couple of articles, I did know most the information already outside of a few small things, but after digging I found some great sources which provided information I did not know. These two sources detail the journey of the creation process of the Magic Band and difficulties faced along the path. Learning of these difficulties is extremely beneficial as it helps me to know what path I will stay away from for my solution. I also learned more about outside firm's roles in the Magic Band creation.

Next week, on monday, I will finish contacting Disney professionals with my plans to see if I can get Disney support with my project. So far, I have not received a response from the couple of emails I have sent, but I am hopeful I will get a response soon.
